

McGregor Coxall were awarded the lead consultant role for the public domain design of the Green Square Town Centre in South Sydney. The work follows on from the international competition the firm won for the masterplan of the urban centre in 2001. This sustainable metro village project is located over the Green Square station on former industrial land and is the largest urban renewal in the country. 5500 residents and 7000 workers will use the centre once the ten year, $1.7 billion project is completed. The project proposes public and private uses including three urban squares, a new park, community facilities, library, cinemas, bars, residential, commercial and retail facilities. These are arranged along a restored urban creek and green spine. The project is powered by an ecological engine that delivers recycled storm water & renewable energy to the project.
